

at their ends so that the vehicle presented the appearance of an aimless marionette, constantly whirling. To me, with the glasses, the middle appeared sometimes bean shaped but that may well be a defect in my eyesight, as the object was then very distant.

At last it disappeared from sight entirely. As we had no guess at its altitude we could not guess its size although I would hazard the statement that it seemed set about the usual altitude of passing planes and seemed to fade away much as a plane would, but far more slowly. We must have seen it for ten
